How do your students see “the North”?

Is it a place, a feeling, their family, an attitude?

The Great Exhibition of the North will be the largest event in England in 2018 and aims to show the world how the North of England's art, culture and design is driving the world of tomorrow.

As part of the exhibition, they have organised a photography competition that seeks to capture what the North means to individuals. There is a special category in the contest for schools with prizes available for 2 age groups, under-14s and 14-18 years olds. Each winner will receive a £50 gift voucher while the winning school will receive £500 in art supplies.

Photos need to fit one of four themes:

- Northern Culture
- Landscape and Cityscape
- Art and Design
- My Innovative North

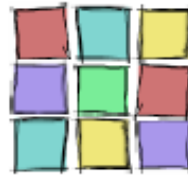

To get your application pack, with rules for how to apply along with lesson plans to introduce the idea to your pupils, visit <https://getnorth2018.com/image-competition-schools-submission/>

Approaches to supporting LGBT young people

Primary

Special

Secondary

7th November 2017, 4 – 7.30pm

Crucible Theatre, 55 Norfolk Street, Sheffield S1 1DA

This seminar and discussion is part of the ESRC Festival of Social Science and will explore what we understand about LGBT young people and the kinds of support they might need, drawing on a number of social science research projects that have consulted both young people and practitioners. Previous studies, for example, suggest that some methods of supporting young LGBT people, such as via counselling, can be seen by LGBT young people as 'pathologising' and/or apportioning 'blame'.

The event will give participants a chance to enhance their knowledge and understanding of LGBT young people and the kinds of support they might need. Social science research will be presented in an informal environment, helping to generate thought and discussion between all those with an interest in this area, with a view to informing future practice.

It will begin informally at 4pm with refreshments, during which time participants are encouraged to view and discuss the visual materials on display. This will be followed at 4.30pm by the talks, before a short break and then an informal discussion/workshop to discuss the issues.

Speakers include:

- Eleanor Formby (Sheffield Hallam University) and Jo Woodiwiss (University of Huddersfield) discussing their current research on approaches to supporting LGBT young people in England and Sweden
- Catherine Donovan (University of Sunderland) speaking on 'Young LGB and/or T people and sex and relationships education: Making the case for youth work'
- Jen Slater (Sheffield Hallam University) talking about their research project, 'Around the toilet', which explores the toilet as a place of exclusion and belonging

The event is free but please book via the eventbrite link here: <https://younglgbtpeople.eventbrite.com>

For more information contact Eleanor Formby: e.formby@shu.ac.uk, 0114 225 6065

Teacher Secondment Opportunity –

Sheffield Primary Inclusion Centre

Primary

Due to a late resignation we have the opportunity to offer a short term secondment for a primary teacher at the Sheffield Inclusion Centre. Initially, the position is available for a term from January but is likely to be required until summer. The secondment would be an opportunity for a teacher to work in an unique setting and develop new skills in teaching and the support of complex young people.

Based at the Spring Lane site, the Primary Inclusion Centre is a positive learning environment in which young people make significant progress. We also oversee local Bumblebee provision in two centres within the city and work through the Primary Inclusion Panel in preventing permanent exclusion. If interested, all potential candidates and their senior leaders would be more than welcome to visit in advance to learn more about our provision and the requirements of the role.

ASE Northern Conference 2017

in partnership with

Sheffield Institute of Education

Saturday 11th November 2017

focusing on

Inclusion and Diversity in Science Education

The theme for this year's conference is inclusion and diversity in their widest sense. Do you want to update your knowledge of science teaching? Do you teach low or high attainers? Student's with SEND or who are EAL? Are you a BAME teacher?

You will have the opportunity to:

- recognise how science teaching can be made more inclusive
- select activities and resources to use in your own classroom
- identify innovative approaches for the science curriculum
- discuss, engage, and collaborate with fellow science professionals.

The keynote is presented by the team from the Autism Centre at Sheffield Hallam University that promotes a view of autism as a different way of being. Other workshop sessions will address teaching children with SEND, and teaching minority groups, plus widening participation in HE.

A science focus is provided by a series of workshops of the teaching of energy, using STEM ambassadors, genomics teaching approaches and support for primary science and physics teaching. There are workshop sessions on both teacher and student well being.
